SINGING OUR WAY THROUGH:

SONGS FOR THE WORLD'S BRAVEST KIDS

In July of 2012, Boston musician and father Alastair Moock learned that one of his five-year-old twin daughters, Clio, had leukemia. Alastair and Clio sang and wrote together while she was in the hospital, and over the next year Alastair continued to write and collect songs. With the help of an amazing fundraising campaign, those songs came together in an album called Singing Our Way Through: Songs for the World's Bravest Kids. Now Alastair is bringing that album—and live performances—to hospitals, clinics, and camps around the country.
